

TRAVELER'S REST

6 miles east of Toccoa

This fittingly named early-19th-century frame structure, one of the oldest houses in northeastern Georgia, was once regarded as the most popular inn and tavern on the Federal Post Road between Charleston and Chattanooga. It also served as a trading post for the Cherokees, a post office, and a home. Still in a rural setting, it was acquired by the Georgia Historical Commission in 1955 and was subsequently restored to serve as a museum.
